Her place of birth listed is as Launceston, Tasmania. |
| Early years | “About her childhood she has provided only sketchy details: a father who left the family when she was seven; an autistic brother; a mother stricken by multiple sclerosis whose relationship with her was so fractious that Gibson moved out when she was 12.” Source: http://www.theaustralian.com.au/opinion/a-healthy-dose-of-scepticism-about-belle-gibson/story-e6frg6zo-1227261880798 “As an introverted six-year-old, she teetered on a chair over a stove making dinner for an autistic younger brother and a mother who had multiple sclerosis. As a severely obese 11-year-old, she managed to stop overeating and, with her brother in tow, began sunset strolls around their Brisbane block. Aged 12 and depleted from years as her mother’s carer, she moved in with a classmate, and then a family friend.” “not knowing her father and being estranged from her mother, who had been a foster carer to other children before she got sick” | Attended Wynnum State High School |

| 10 January 2010 | "Hi ladies (and new dads!) I've never really posted on WTE before but live by | | the iPhone app and regular emails. my name is belle, I live in Australia and I'm due on the 3rd or the 6th of July 2010 (15 weeks 2 days) After being told again and again by friends and family that I don't look pregnant, and my Housemates finding out through someone else last night one of their girlfriends came over this morning and mentioned they all know now and she wanted to see my bump under my big pyjama shirt. I lifted it up and she rubbed and poked away and then looked up at me and I was told again "how exciting belle! But you don't look very big yet!" " I can only tell by the firmness" it's really starting to hurt me by so many people telling me I don't look pregnant, and I DONT! I can slightly tell because it is hard now and I can't 'suck in' anymore. My boobs aren't anywhere near as tender as they were a week or more ago and I'm not cramping or vomiting. Sure, my nails are nicer, my tummy is hard, I get slightly nauseous when I start eating, my nose is bleedish and congested and my gums bleed when I brush. But that's IT! I really don't know if I'm the most paranoid expectant mother, but my gp seems to think so. I've got the biggest fear of miscarriaging and I've had too many thoughts and nightmares over it! I haven't had any "regular" signs like spotting or that overwhelming sense of loss, but I really need some other mothers due around my date to share. Do you look big or showing yet is my question!? I would really appreciate as much feedback and 'showing photos' as possible. I saw one this morning of a lady due just a week after me and she was twice my size. I see the gp tomorrow for my blood test results to come back and to get a referral to book in for hospital classes and the birth. But he can tell me all he wants I've got a healthy little bub, until I see the third ultrasound in about twoish weeks, I'm not going to be settled. Please help. I'm sure I sound crazy. Haha :) thanks xx belle."

8:10: "I wish I had the guts to go on theme parks rides even at two months pregnant! I've lost a lot of weight, and a further four kilos since falling, so I think that may be why I'm not showing greatly too... Because whether I think it or not my body probably is in decent shape. It's funny how were all just wishing to have a big plump belly for the first times ever! Thank you for sharing, it does remind me not to stress because I'm stressing for two now. Best of luck to you also xx”

8:16: “I think it's because a majority of my friends are twenty year olds and whilst I'm living a life above their maturity, falling pregnant and managing businesses they're drinking their lives away. A lot of people are so shell shocked by it and think that it can't really happen to a close friend the same age as themselves. It's quite upsetting when you get the whole "YOU? PREGNANT? But we only went to the bar a few weeks ago... and you're only twenty... And you're ruining your body!" I don't know whether they're subconsciously putting me down or everyone genuinely thinks it's weird for young women to fall, but I'm over it. I'll embrace away! And as I read your post I felt a little movement and ache in my lower tummy. so much to embrace! :)”

“I went back to the GP for my blood test results and he said that all was perfect! I said ive been freaking out a little because of everyone doubting me and he smirked an said "the bump will come! It will!" trying to insinuate that I should be patient because when it's here it'll be big! I've got my really great Doppler coming in the mail within the next few working days and my first ever 16/17 week antenatal meeting at the royal women hospital next week which rings the bells that this IS happening. I also want to share that whilst on the phone to the bubs daddy I rolled over onto my hand and all of a sudden a big rumble an vibrating sensation against my hand happened! He moved and I cried! It was unbelievable. Thank you all for a of your support and wisdom, advice and calming posts! You that have pictures in your posts are stunning with gorgeous children! Thanks again xx”

| 12 January 2010 | 1:03: "I'm one of THOSE retarded people that refuse to take a lot of things because of a lot of what it's made of, pregnant or not. I've been detoxing because of cancer and even when I take 1/2 a supermarket strength panadol it knocks me about because I guess my system is so clean now. I won't even take hot or warm baths now after reading and learning about the chemicals you absorb from unfiltered water so I have stupidly quick showers to ensure were clean." 1:19: "I started getting chiropractic treatment twice a week since I was about fifteen and after three months I went from crying myself to sleep and not realizing I was a literal hunchback to having slight uncomfortable pain and a great posture. It was so expensive but very corrective...I don't know what life would be like now if I didn't get all the Chiro treatment back in my childhood and early adult years" 2:13 "I left home before puberty was fully kicked in". Source: http://www.whattoexpect.com/forums/july-2010-babies/archives/when-do-you-start-feeling-your-baby-move.html | |

| | "I'm 16 weeks on the weekend and last night whilst trying to get comfy I rolled over onto my side, but near onto my tummy and placed my hand under my belly to support it a little. A moment later i felt a massive movement and a few minutes later after repositioning myself I felt light vibrations in my right lower side of my abdomen. So overwhelming! I feel a lot of movement now, because I've learnt to spot the difference between gassy stomach noises and the bub moving about which seems but isn't gas." | |

Is July already a special month? A. Nope! I'm due an exact month after the daddys though, so that's nice. Q. How many children do you have or want to have? A. This will be my first, and possibly my last after a lot of medical issues. I would love two in total though, for balance and just company for our first to grow with. | |

|---------------|---|--|
| | Q. Breast or Bottle? A. Breast! A lot of new research came out in Australia last week saying formulas are more advanced than breast milk now, so I was thinking bottle as I'm a very young and first time mum. But expecting dad is very into developmental science and evolution etc etc, and I just KNOW he will think and appreciate it if I breastfeed, as that what I was born to do, right? Also it'll be beautiful for bonding. Q. Natural Delivery or Give me the drugs? A. Natural Delivery. I'd really like to learn to manage the pain and stress naturally and come to a complete center with myself, but I'm DEFINITELY NOT ruling out the drugs!! Q. Do you have names picked out yet? A. Boy - max or Cooper. Girl – Maddison Source: http://www.whattoexpect.com/forums/july-2010-babies/archives/when-are-you-finding-out-if-at-all-the-sex.html “I've got myself booked in for the 10th of February, so that the daddy can fly over and share the halfway milestone and the big ultrasound together with me. I'll be about 20ish weeks and eleven weeks between any U/S but I'm prepared to wait so he can try and be a part of it all. I expect it's a girl, as does EVERYONE but my step sister. I refer to the bubba as a boy, but I'm not hoping for either - it's my first, so either is a real blessing and miracle for me!” | |

"I move into my own first apartment in my new state on the weekend, just to get out of my friends' hair (im sure they were over the thumping doppler noises coming from my room at weird hours anyway)

so i was laying in bed last night and having a chat to a good friend who'll be living with me in the new apartment and help me out for a while.

I just started a new job, and have only got an exact 3 months off pay from them and can only save $2500AU MAXIMUM out of that. i have no other support and havent got anything but some basic clothes organised. is anyone else in the same situation?

I feel all of a sudden so disorganised and want everything in order a month before im due and dont see a possible way of it happening :(“

4:17: “I just hope that i can afford this little man, because right now im having my doubts. People ARE "joking" that he'll be sleeping in the dresser... im not usually financially strained, but its seeming obvious that im underprepared.”

6:17: “eeesh! i cannot bare the thought of having my little man breastfeeding or sleeping in the same room as me until hes FOUR. thats absolutely crazy and bizarre in my mind!
weve found some really cheap, gorgeous bassinets over here in AUS, so i still might try and use one for the first four or so months, just because i dont know how i will go running to his room in the middle of the night with no support. my room is big enough for a proper crib/cot anyway, if i want it in my room for a little while. i just have NO idea how im going to cope right now. thank you for your experience though! its really made me think a little.

| 20 April 2010 | Source: http://www.whattoexpect.com/forums/july-2010-babies/archives/upset-about-baby-shower.html “as a lot of you all know by now,im pretty new to my new state in australia, so i have limited support etc over here. i organised to have my shower on the 4th june, a month before im due. that way everyone is off uni, has annual leave, no childrens birthdays, gave everyone enough time to save up, the father will be here for his birthday, so he'll be able to come if he wishes, and i'll (hopefully) be off work. | |

|-------------|---|--|
| | turns out my two best friends have booked their holidays for two weeks after that date so they can be here for the birth instead, and my friends from school that i grew up with are no longer able to come until july also as they havent saved. i went to SO much effort to organise a date that suited everyone, even sent out emails etc with flight sales so they could get here for less than $200AU return. they all want to come down, but have made no effort to come down for my shower date. so now ive cancelled it after buying eeverything for round two invitations. im really quite upset, even depressed at seeing all of you girls organising your gorgeous showers, im happy for you all, and i really do hope im not raining down on your parades at all :) but as a first time, young mother, that has over come a lot for this little man in me, i would love nothing more than to somewhat celebrate with my close friends and even be supported in some way by them. because at the moment, im working part time, going to hospital atleast once a week after work hours, then travelling an hour home to cook and clean and try and fit some rest in. i know it doesnt sound like im struggling. but doing it all on your own, with all the medical dramas ive tried to fight before fallign pregnant makes this so hard and was looking forward to my shower SO MUCH!" Source: http://www.whattoexpect.com/forums/july-2010-babies/archives/28-weeks-today-7-months-it-39-s-flying-by-pic.html "im 29 weeks, 3 days, today and my bump is, well, non existant. people at work still dont know im pregnant and i still fit into all my tops the same as i did eight months ago. its WEIRD!" | |

Belle Gibson // THEWHOLEPANTRY (

February // it's the last week(ish) for you to buy this issue of @vogueaustralia and see me on page 84 of their 'Natural Beauties' feature. Some big bold words in there, and every day I've felt honoured seeing such a collaboration spread these important messages on behalf of me, all 150,000 of you, and to the rest of the country. What an honour! "Four years after her diagnosis she still isn't in remission, but her brain tumour has shrunk. Inspired, she wanted to share everything she believes about how whole foods can help repair the body." "I made an app because its the most searchable and accessible market in the world. It was never about money; it was about providing a resource that was continuously inspiring, motivating and empowering." Wow. Emotions are big here after finally sitting down and making myself read this page of honesty. Thank you again to the incredible @sigourneyc antelo for becoming a friend and an inspiration in media. Love xxxx

| |  Belle Gibson // THEWHOLEPANTRY (@healing_belle) Today i awaited news that didn't come. Counting down until tomorrow, when hopefully there'll be something to celebrate. For three months I've been putting off listening to the alarm bells I've heard time and time before. With a overwhelmed heart, I wanted to let you all know that I'm currently being tested for two possible secondary cancers (which are neurological this time). I really appreciate you all coming on this journey and revolution with me and above all, being the massive force that keeps me going and getting me out of bed each morning. If these results come back positive; nothing will change. My life has always been filled with arduous lessons and this one wont stop me either. Going from 6 weeks to live, to celebrating my forth year with brain cancer, I know now that respecting your own journey and intuitively healing, listening and living as YOUR body, mind and path intended is staple. I wouldn't be sharing this message if I ignored what was optimal for my health and recovery, and I sure as hell wouldn't be 4 years on with this next bump in the road. What surprises me is that anyone close to me, that saw the beginning of my experience with cancer, knew that I always knew this one was coming. I called it. Choose your own future, health, happiness, destiny; all of it. Do it by respecting what feels right for you - we aren't equal. Those that honour those diversities are the ones who live the happiest, longest and most understood lives. 50 days until these tropical waters await my next massive healing holiday. So excited. #ivegotthis | |

I was feeling isolated and deeply hurt, and could see the need for a resource that facilitated all I felt like I was living without; motivation and support for a healthier, more balanced, informed and inspired life. I am more encouraged to take even greater care of myself, after all, I strongly believe you can’t teach something which you aren’t learning or living yourself.” Wishlist for belle@thewholepantryapp.com http://www.amazon.com/gp/registry/wishlist/?ie=UTF8&cid=A2CRZDFHRW52AE | |
